Read the following passage and answer the questions:

(5 Marks)

I am one of those people who are not for spending too much of our money on the study of space. I don't mean that we should stop studying space, of course. I only want to direct some of the much money spent on space research to studying other fields and places that I think are much more important and profitable.

We spend billions of dollars to study the sun and distant stars. We should stop this and study the oceans instead. They cover nearly 70% of the earth.

Oceanography is more important than space science. It researches processes that directly affect our lives. For example, we release tonnes of waste into the ocean every year.

Oceanographers, who specialize in various fields, can tell us the results of pollution on marine life, on the chemistry of the seas and on the currents (movement of water) that affect climate.

We know that in different parts of the seas, distinctive forms of life have evolved. There are even living things that do not depend on the sun for energy! Maybe we can learn something useful by studying them. There are vast areas of oceans, especially in the deepest water, that are unexplored. This is what we should be researching, not the stars.

1. What is the main idea of the passage?

- a. Studying space is a waste of time. c. Studying deep seas is useful.
b. Studying oceans is more useful than studying space. d. Saving money is necessary.

2. If we study oceans,

- a. we may explore more about marine life. c. we may pollute the environment.
b. they can be distinctive d. they can be unprofitable.

3. Oceanography researches.....

- a. processes that directly affect our life. c. chemistry of seas.
b. stars and deep water. d. processes that do not affect our life.

4. The last paragraph deals with

- a. different marine lives. c. the uselessness of exploring space.
b. studying oceanography. d. the importance of saving money to explore space.

5. The writer recommends studying

- a. shallow areas. b. deep oceans. c. warm water. d. remote areas.
